CHALLENGE YOURSELF AT MICHIGAN ROSS:
WHERE PROVEN RESEARCH MEETS PRACTICAL APPLICATION
LEAD THE CHANGE YOU WANT TO SEE.

ORGANIZATIONAL ADVANCEMENT REQUIRES A STRONG CATALYST — YOU.

Whether you’re a seasoned or high-potential leader, you have a vision for the future. But bringing that vision to life requires managing complexity, making strategic decisions, and leading others for powerful results.

This type of dexterity doesn’t just happen — it must be mastered. Named one of the Financial Times’ elite 11 providers, Ross Executive Education programs provide updated approaches and deep insight from the world’s leading business thinkers. Our faculty emphasize an action-based approach, which means you won’t just read and talk about effective business practices. You’ll actually deploy them. Highly interactive sessions, simulations, and real business projects give you the skills to immediately apply advanced new concepts to your work.

In addition to program information, we’ve filled this catalog with articles, quick tips, participant insights, and the latest research from Michigan Ross thought leaders. It’s our way of showing—not just telling you—the types of valuable knowledge you’ll find at Ross for ongoing success.

If you haven’t explored our certificate options, we encourage you to take a look at page 27. Loyalty discounts, tailored learning paths, networking opportunities, and recognition from a global leader in business education are just a few of the reasons many participants choose to pursue a Ross certificate.

No matter your leadership goals, we are confident Ross Executive Education will help you transform your organization and your career.

THE NEW GLOBAL LANDSCAPE WHERE DO YOU FIT IN?

With Professor Linda Y.C. Lim
The evolving nature of Asian markets and companies requires changing the way you think about business.

The economic engine of Asia has shifted into a new gear: one that has profound implications for your business. No longer merely exporters, Asian markets have growing numbers of savvy consumers and maturing companies ready to compete on the global business stage. If you’re not thinking about how to adapt your strategy to deal with it, you risk being left by the side of the road, says Linda Y.C. Lim, a faculty member of the Michigan Ross Executive Program.

“In today’s economy, classic ‘Western’ or international business practices don’t always work when serving Asian consumers or facing Asian competitors,” says Lim. “Asia’s emerging prominence is impacting global business in new ways, and smart players will adapt.”

Lim, an expert in international investment and business strategy, teaches the fundamentals of this shift and how to deal with them in the Michigan Ross Executive Program. While it’s impossible to know all the right answers, Lim shows how to ask the right questions so that you’ll better understand how these changes affect your industry.

Tables Turned

After decades of exporting and saving, Asian countries are now spending more, saving less, and increasing consumption and imports. Companies based in Asia are innovating at home and competing on a global scale. They’ve turned the tables on Western markets and firms.

“Asia will account for most world economic and market growth for the rest of this century,” Lim says. “Its size and active participation in international trade and investment means what happens in Asia affects other regions.”

One of the main implications of this new dynamic is how companies will design products and services. Asian customers are replacing Americans and Europeans as dominant global consumers. As such, businesses have to adapt to different customers with different tastes, income levels, and cultures. Simply tweaking an existing product for a new market may be a recipe for failure. The fundamental way companies innovate, design, source, and market products will have to change for the emerging Asian consumer marketplace.

“This was done for the American market half a century ago, and now there’s a new dominant world consumer,” Lim says.

A Different Playbook

Beyond calculating economic shifts and marketing for new consumers, businesses across the globe must be prepared for competitors and partners from Asia. Asian companies, some of them long established at home, are entering developed and emerging markets and becoming global players. The playbook they use is often different, so it’s a good idea to learn it.

For example, many Asian companies are less focused on short-term profits and willing to operate with lower margins and a longer-term payback period. Some benefit from government protection and subsidies. How does this impact your business decisions if you’re leading an established company or another rising Asian company?

“For years, business curriculum has taken for granted specific institutions and structures, such as large public companies in developed Western markets,” says Lim. “However, Eastern and Western structures can be very different.”

In the Executive Program, Lim covers the different forms of business in Asia — the Japanese keiretsu, the Korean chaebol, Taiwan and Hong Kong small- to medium-sized enterprises, Southeast Asian family conglomerates, and government-linked companies. She explains both the advantages these business models enjoy and the challenges they face on the global business stage. Program participants learn to develop a strategy for their organization that helps them both work and compete with these companies.

Questions participants consider include, What’s the best way to partner with a state-owned enterprise? How can you compete in technological innovation? How can you compete for talent?

The key is getting to the right questions and learning how to think differently, Lim says.

“Participants in this program come away with new thinking on how their business practices and strategies need to change,” says Lim. “Not only in Asia, but at home and around the world.”

Real business doesn’t happen in neat, compartmentalized silos. It’s unpredictable, messy, and seldom falls into functional categories. Real business is about issues, challenges, and opportunities that defy traditional labels of finance, marketing, HR, and strategy.

The Michigan Ross Executive Program takes your professional development experience beyond traditional academic lines. By broadening your understanding of business issues outside your firm and function, you’ll learn to lead with an industrywide, global perspective. You’ll become a more forward-thinking executive as you explore how current global news stories impact your business and industry. Additionally, you’ll discover how to seize timely opportunities

Educating the Experienced

Business theories, frameworks, and models are standard offerings in the business school classroom, and they work well most of the time. But Michigan Ross Professor Ray Reilly thinks seasoned leaders who have substantial knowledge and experience require a different approach to learning — one that emphasizes the biggest challenges of today’s business environment.

His solution? The newly designed Michigan Ross Executive Program, which turns the traditional classroom experience on its head.

“Many of our participants have advanced business degrees and are already familiar with the traditional frameworks used both in the classroom and in business situation analysis,” says Reilly. “We teach them to hone their critical thinking skills and apply that knowledge — as well as new frameworks — to today’s most pressing issues. This challenges both executives and faculty members to venture out of their comfort zones and discover new ways of dealing with complexity.”

Professor Ray Reilly
and prevent missteps, all while developing sophisticated business knowledge spanning global, industry, firm, and individual levels. You’ll emerge with new tools and frameworks to understand competitive forces, identify game-changing opportunities, and position yourself for success.

Takeaways

- A customized general manager’s agenda that provides actionable steps to accomplish key goals and improve your bottom line
- Comprehensive understanding of the global business climate and evolving industry dynamics
- Practical frameworks to implement competitive, cross-functional strategies
- Tools to get results across functions and foster a collaborative, high-performance culture

STARTING FROM THE BUSINESS WORLD

The program begins by looking at the global business economy holistically, and then drills down to explore issues of industries and firms. Lastly, participants explore their own organization and themselves as a leader. Starting with an outward focus helps participants determine what competencies and frameworks can best help them tackle challenges that come from outside of the firm.

ANTICIPATING IMPACT

Reilly challenges faculty to identify the top pressing issues in the areas they teach, and asks participants to share their most challenging business problems. In a collaborative classroom discussion atmosphere, faculty link relevant research to relevant problems. Faculty and participants also discuss the latest news headlines and how they directly impact their business life. For example, they might discuss a Wall Street Journal article on the next possible Federal Reserve chair. They’ll talk about that person, what policy agenda they might bring, and how that will directly affect someone’s business.

MAKING CONNECTIONS

“We’re taking these stories and connecting them to the organizations and the executives in the classroom,” Reilly says. “Anticipating how the world around us will influence our business and being able to act quickly takes a certain type of critical thinking and knowledge. In any industry, what happens in the outside world can throw a wrench into the best-laid plans. What I want to do is help executives develop the thinking practices to stay ahead of the curve and reap a bottom-line benefit from doing so.”

Michigan Ross Executive Program alumni are some of the world’s top business executives who remain colleagues and friends long after the program.
A Playbook for Intuition

Do snap decisions, intuition, and gut feelings have a place in business? They may sound like risky practices, but Professor Ray Reilly says seasoned leaders rely on intuition every day. However, it’s a specific type of intuition: one that’s shaped over time by continually applying frameworks to experiences until they become second nature. Smart, quick thinking and execution can indeed become “automatic,” but it takes work to get there. Reilly offers these tips for sharpening your decision-making skills:

ALWAYS HAVE A ROAD MAP. Use a proven framework as a tool for understanding business challenges and making informed decisions. Without one, your actions won’t have a foundation.

THINK STRATEGICALLY. In addition to a framework of understanding, you need a structured thought process for assessing problems. Without one, your decisions (and their outcomes) will lack continuity and consistency.

KEEP PRACTICING. Over time, applying these frameworks and processes becomes as natural as riding a bike: call it “informed intuition.”

LEADERSHIP IS NOT A POSITION. IT'S YOUR CAPACITY TO INFLUENCE.

No matter your place in the ranks of your organization, your ability to initiate change hinges on how you inspire yourself and others to do great work.

So what does it take to inspire great work? Get to a higher purpose, says Ross Professor Robert Quinn.

Pursuing a higher purpose makes work more rewarding than doing it just for the purpose of obtaining profit, and it in turn leads to significantly better results for the company. When an organization shares a collective higher purpose, work matters more to everyone. Employees have a true stake in the organization’s success, and individual contributors take on the mindset of owners, responsible for realizing their own benefit. They go beyond their job descriptions, collaborate and innovate more, and deliver higher-quality work.

Professor Quinn’s research shows that the sooner you as a leader tap into the deep needs and values of your employees and stakeholders, the sooner you will realize the full potential of yourself and your organization. In fact, Fortune 500 companies identified as organizations of higher purpose outperform other companies by a ratio of 8 to 1 on average.¹

1. Identify and Articulate Your Company’s Higher Purpose

Every organization has a higher purpose. It is simply the ultimate value or benefit it provides for its stakeholders, including customers, employees, and shareholders. Profit is simply a byproduct of creating this value. For example, investment firms work to create financial security and peace of mind for retirees. Home appliance companies foster a home life for families. And technology companies make our lives more convenient. To identify your company’s higher purpose, listen deeply to a wide array of stakeholders and then articulate the most salient values and desires you hear.

2. Be Authentic

You can’t fake this stuff. Tactics to articulate a higher purpose for the sole purpose of incentivizing employees will backfire. Realizing the value of striving for a higher purpose starts by living it yourself. In order to truly inspire others, you must embody the values of your organization in your own actions. Live what you preach, and translate it to all your daily activities.

3. Communicate the Path to Achieving the Higher Purpose

It’s not enough to state a higher purpose of work and expect everyone in your organization to connect the dots. As a truly transformational leader, you must translate the higher purpose into specific strategic objectives and individual work plans. A vision should provide a sense of direction related to the higher purpose, and be simple, idealistic, challenging, and realistic. This vision will become a roadmap that can be used to parse out collective short-term goals and individual daily actions.

Here are some guidelines for this process:

• Start with an articulation of past achievements and current capacities
• State the higher purpose and vision in clear and unequivocal terms
• Set objectives for innovative activities to get there
• Hire and empower innovative people who want to pursue the higher purpose
• Provide support and assistance
• Encourage and reward learning and information sharing
• Test proposed innovations with small-scale experiments
• Reward initiative, innovation, positivity, and flexibility
• Examine and learn from successes and failures
• Continually monitor and refine the path to excellence

Put It All Together

By striving for a higher purpose and entering the fundamental state of leadership, you have the opportunity to do something that few others know how to do. To develop the full suite of skills that will enable you to become a transformational leader, explore the Positive Leadership Program.

PROFESSOR ROBERT QUINN

Robert Quinn is a global expert on the process of positive change, individual and collective capacity, and transformational leadership. He is one of the pioneering scholars of the field of positive leadership, and has published numerous studies and 16 books on positive change. He is a fellow of both the Academy of Management and the World Business Academy. He has 25 years of experience working with executives on organizational change, leadership, and vision in large-scale projects. He teaches in both the MBA and executive levels and is known for innovative instructional efforts.

As a strong leader, there will be times when you have to deliver messages that are critical or disapproving. Though the importance of maintaining a positive work environment can’t be overstated, people need feedback — often negative feedback — in order to grow and achieve.

Using supportive communication, you can deliver negative feedback in a positive way without diluting your message. This method helps ensure not only that feedback is accurate and straightforward, but also that the relationship between you and the recipient is supported — and even enhanced — by the interchange.

Delivering negative feedback within the framework of supportive communication separates the recipient’s behavior from their self-worth. It’s more than “playing nice.” Maintaining positive relationships in the workplace significantly increases engagement, productivity, and ultimately, the bottom line.

POSITIVE LEADERSHIP
exced.bus.umich.edu/positiveleadership

The latest research on today’s leading companies shows performance improvement is realized only through creating a culture of high achievement.

This research also proves that positive approaches to leadership deliver significantly better business results than common, outdated methods that target weakness and deficit. Master proven techniques to bring about higher profitability and customer satisfaction through exemplary employee engagement. By examining your leadership style and completing case analyses and team exercises, you’ll harness strategies used by leaders across the globe to yield top results. You’ll also apply concepts to a challenge in your organization and emerge with a customized plan to solve it.

Takeaways

• Tools for navigating change and responding strategically to crisis
• Techniques to unlock the highest potential within yourself and others
• Methods for developing high-impact relationships and a results-oriented work environment
• A capacity to stimulate exceptional individual and organizational growth

STEP 1
DESCRIBE THE EVENT, BEHAVIOR, OR CIRCUMSTANCE OBJECTIVELY.

Try to frame the problem in a way that is nonjudgmental and verifiable.
EXAMPLE: “You didn’t make the deadline” is a fact, but “Your procrastinating is unacceptable” is an opinion.

STEP 2
DESCRIBE OUTCOMES AND YOUR FEELINGS, NOT THE OTHER PERSON’S ATTRIBUTES.

EXAMPLE: “As a result, we’re not going to be presenting at the conference, and I’m worried this will impact our firm’s reputation.” Note that the focus is on the impact and how you feel about it — not on the other person’s character.

STEP 3
SUGGEST ALTERNATIVE SOLUTIONS THAT COULD BEST RESOLVE THE ISSUE.

EXAMPLE: “How can we make sure this doesn’t happen going forward? Would it be helpful if I sent out a reminder before future deadlines?” Be open to constructive dialogue as the conversation progresses. It’s important to arrive at a solution that provides confidence and closure for both parties.

Adapted from Professor Kim Cameron’s Practicing Positive Leadership: Tools and Techniques that Create Extraordinary Results.
High-performing organizations create leaders who capitalize on strengths and overcome weaknesses; maximize value by embracing and balancing diversity of experience and thought; and create a work environment that encourages new ideas and an improvement-driven culture across the firm. The Competing Values Framework (CVF), which originated at Michigan Ross, does all of this and more: it helps leaders develop perspectives to drive organizational success. In-program and post-program coaching helps ensure integration of key components into daily practice.

Over the course of two years, Aaron Roach attended three programs through Ross Executive Education. As his leadership responsibilities grew, he came back for a fourth: Management of Managers.

“This program gave me tools to significantly boost my team’s performance,” says Roach. “Now, we consistently rank at the top level for the company’s key performance indicators. Every day, I apply Ross frameworks to help me be a better collaborator, team-builder, and coach.”

Professors D. Scott DeRue and Maxim Sytch were named among the top 40 business school professors under 40 by CNN Money and Poets and Quants. Ascending to new levels of management requires developing your leadership approach to achieve greater impact. Learn to set the right vision, build and inspire results-oriented teams, and embrace change — even in continually shifting, disruptive environments. You’ll develop a customized, 100-day action plan for team and leadership development. Professors D. Scott DeRue and Maxim Sytch were named among the top 40 business school professors under 40 by CNN Money and Poets and Quants.

Is High Performance Hurting You?

As a high-potential leader, proving your ability is critical to your career trajectory. But watch out — if you’re too concerned with doing things right, you might avoid stretching your comfort zones, which can stunt your development as a leader. Professor D. Scott DeRue offers these mindful engagement tips to fuel continual growth:

EXPERIMENT OFTEN
Active experimentation, or trying something new with full acceptance that things might not go as planned, can help you become comfortable with the unfamiliar. When built into a stretch assignment, a planned experiment provides a safety net while maximizing learning — failure is already accounted for (and perhaps expected), so you’re more likely to take risks.

SEEK FEEDBACK
Asking for honest input from superiors, peers, and subordinates may be uncomfortable at times, but it can help uncover valuable insight that would otherwise go unshared.

SCHEDULE TIME TO REFLECT
Reflection — or learning to digest, synthesize, and draw patterns across your experiences — is essential to self-awareness and growth. Schedule time to record your observations about personal behaviors and traits (otherwise, it’s easy to push this important task to the side).

LEADING HIGH-PERFORMING TEAMS
execed.bus.umich.edu/leadingteams

Unleash the talent of your teams — globally, locally, or virtually. In this program, you’ll learn key practices to achieve sustainable, extraordinary performance while gaining a deeper understanding of your leadership strengths and weaknesses. Propel your growth as a visionary leader who builds coalitions and acts as an ambassador. You’ll analyze common pitfalls many talented leaders make and discover which behaviors support a culture of high performance. Action-based tools include self-assessments, team diagnostics, and simulations. Each participant will receive a follow-up coaching session within three months of the program.

STAYING ON TRACK IN TIMES OF TURBULENCE

When faced with a customer challenge or crisis situation, employees may not always remember principles that should guide their decision making, such as company mission statements and strategies. As a leader, you can help your teams stay aligned, focused, and inspired by giving them a commander’s intent statement.

WHAT IS A COMMANDER’S INTENT STATEMENT?
This tactic — used by the military for decades — boils complex objectives into a memorable statement that teams can understand, care about, and act upon. It should be:

- Aligned with a mission or strategy
- Simple, clear, and short
- In your own words (no jargon)
- Concrete and actionable
- Meaningful and emotionally resonant

EXAMPLES AND APPLICATIONS
MEDICAL: Our goal is to eliminate pain and suffering.
RESORT: We will always provide the best vacation experience possible.

AD AGENCY: We exist to be a place where creativity thrives.

WHAT ARE THE OUTCOMES?
A commander’s intent statement anticipates the unexpected and recognizes that employees’ actions cannot be scripted. It gives them the flexibility to accomplish what needs to be done while staying true to the spirit of the goal, especially when they face situations in which the official strategy is insufficient. When teaching executives how to create and lead teams, one of the first things I have them do is write down their commander’s intent statement. This simple activity can have a profound effect on both executives and the teams they lead.
NEGOTIATING FOR POSITIVE RESULTS
execed.bus.umich.edu/negotiating

It’s long been assumed that competition and cooperation are separate negotiation strategies. But this program — fueled by years of research, teaching, and coaching — teaches you to leverage both skills at the same time for more effective outcomes. You’ll use simulations of actual business challenges to learn to tap into yourself as a resource, be more aware of how to negotiate across cultures, find new opportunities for all parties, and build relationships that get results.

Additionally, you’ll learn to broaden your definition of what a negotiation looks like, enabling you to approach both high-stakes deals and daily office interactions more naturally, confidently, and successfully.

Negotiating Genuinely

DON’T PLAY A ROLE: BE YOURSELF
Our stereotypes of how a good negotiator behaves, our fear of being taken advantage of, and our desire to excel drive us to act in ways that aren’t genuine. But you don’t have to be a salesperson to effectively communicate your value proposition. Your biggest resource in the negotiation is the uniqueness of who you are.

SURVEY THE LANDSCAPE
There is no formula of tactics to apply in every negotiation. How you explore opportunities depends upon the people involved, the business context, cultural nuances, and your goals. Being strategic and genuine will enable you to adjust your approach to achieve positive results.

COOPERATE AND COMPETE
Many people think of cooperation and competition as separate strategies. Successful positive negotiators leverage both simultaneously, adding value for the other party, expanding what can be accomplished, and ultimately gaining more for themselves.

Professor Shirli Kopelman is the author of the recent Negotiating Genuinely, an innovative approach for negotiating more naturally, positively, and successfully.

Leadership Lessons from the Top of the World

What’s to be learned about business from climbing a mountain? A lot, says Professor D. Scott DeRue. He recently summited Mount Everest and spoke with Businessweek about what it takes to accomplish Everest-sized goals in your work:

PUT THE “WE” AHEAD OF “ME”
To truly succeed, you’ve got to align your goals with the group’s. On Everest, everyone wants to summit, but team members often differ on safety thresholds. Teams require a shared vision to be effective. The same is true in business.

ASK THE RIGHT QUESTIONS
In the face of risk, you have to make the right decisions amidst conflicting views and opinions. Manage communication effectively to make sure you’ll get the best information to make the best decision.

DEVELOP MENTAL TOUGHNESS
Great teams are not born perfect. They come ready to learn, adjust, and overcome setbacks. How you adapt, commit, and go after a goal determines your success.

HOW TO BUILD A LEADERSHIP BRAND

By Professor Dave Ulrich

Lifetime Achievement Award – HR Magazine, 2012
Put simply, a brand is the earned reputation of a product, company, or institution. Brands take years to build, and they’re a cumulative reflection of many things: quality, customer service, advertising and PR, word of mouth, and consistent deliverables over a period of time. By extension, a leadership brand turns customer expectations into leadership actions.

Long-term organizational success depends on not just developing leaders, but developing a leadership brand.

When you focus on developing individual leaders, you may get short-term results by building the personal qualities of the individual; however, if you want to develop effective and sustainable leadership across your organization, you must focus on developing a leadership brand. By implementing the four steps below, your company can ensure consistent leadership bench strength well into the future.

1. MASTER LEADERSHIP FUNDAMENTALS

   All brands start by doing the fundamentals well. As an HR leader, you should encourage the development of your company’s managers in these five basic leadership domains:

   - STRATEGY: How do your leaders position the firm for continued success?
   - EXECUTION: How do your leaders build organizational systems that work, deliver results, and make change happen?
   - TALENT MANAGEMENT: How do your leaders coach and communicate with your people?
   - HUMAN CAPITAL DEVELOPMENT: How do your leaders invest in future employees?
   - PERSONAL PROFICIENCY: How do your leaders learn, act with integrity, exercise social and emotional intelligence, and make bold decisions?

   Without consistency in these leadership fundamentals, your leadership brand cannot deliver on customer expectations.

2. LOOK FROM THE OUTSIDE IN

   Build the differentiating aspects of your leadership brand by identifying and understanding what your firm wants to be known for by the outside world. Apple, for example, wants to be known for its outstanding ability to innovate and design user-friendly technology; to that end, its leaders drive innovation in all their decisions. Wal-Mart wants to be known for its everyday low prices, so its leaders are frugal and unassuming themselves, and can drive a hard bargain.

   Once you’ve identified what you want to be known for by customers, define the competencies that will contribute to that goal. Then, craft a clear, concise statement that outlines these competencies and how they relate to your customers’ and investors’ expectations. This helps to guarantee that leaders across the organization share a common goal. It will also inform all of your HR practices (hiring, training, paying, communicating, and governing). This statement establishes the standards of leadership that will turn customer expectations into leadership actions.

3. CONTINUALLY EVALUATE

   As you implement your leadership brand, you must continually evaluate individual leaders to make sure they’re living up to the leadership brand standards. This will require you to assess leaders from the customer’s point of view. For example, instead of worrying about goods shipped on time, customers care about whether they received their goods on time. Make sure your managers lead in ways that further the goals of the customer. By evaluating your leaders’ performance from a customer standpoint, your firm will strengthen its leadership brand.

4. COMMUNICATE SUCCESS

   As your company delivers on its leadership brand promises, it will develop a reputation for exceptionally high-quality management. This reputation will attract talent that connects with the brand, thereby perpetuating the positive cycle.

   You’ll also extend the company’s leadership reputation as you export talent. The strength of your leadership brand can be measured by the degree to which leaders who leave the firm go on to top positions in other corporations. Companies with strong leadership brands are confident about their bench strength and view what many organizations see as a negative — the loss of a leader — as a positive. The consulting firm McKinsey, for example, continues to build its leadership brand by tracking and publishing the feats of its successful alumni.

   As your leaders learn how to master both the core skills of leadership and the unique differentiators that carry the leadership brand, they will increase the value of your organization. By focusing on leadership — not just leaders — and defining a leadership brand, your firm will increase its sustainability year after year.
Establish HR as a true partner in advancing and driving business goals. Join HR expert Dave Ulrich, our team of global HR thought leaders, and top-level HR executives as you set a new, strategic vision for your HR operations. Develop a step-by-step executive agenda to gain buy-in from key stakeholders, balance multinational cultures, and implement change. The results of the HRCS, the largest, most longitudinal study of HR practices worldwide, play a major role in driving our curriculum and your results.

Leveraging HR’s Seat at the Table

How Weyerhaeuser’s HR team is Using Michigan Ross Tools to Shape Overall Business Strategy

CHERYL BOURN — along with a company colleague — participated in the Advanced Human Resource Executive Program (AHREP) as part of a professional development initiative for Weyerhaeuser. Here, she shares how AHREP helped shape companywide workforce strategies.

CONNECTING HR TO BUSINESS STRATEGY

Rather than focusing on what’s trending in HR processes and tools, we took a hard look at how our workforce should be supporting overall business strategy. If you’re going to do great HR work, you have to first look externally at shareholder and customer expectations, then develop workforce strategies which will differentiate you in your markets. So many people talk about HR getting a seat at the table; this program gives you the tools to leverage that seat at that table. Instead of spending time convincing our organization how good our HR systems are, we help lead conversations about where our company is headed.
Takeaways

• The ability to create strategic HR practices that advance business goals

• Strategies to enter global markets and balance multinational cultures

• Tools to define and implement a talent management agenda and build a competitive business culture

• Metrics to better measure HR effectiveness in advancing business objectives

Information from the Human Resource Competency Study (HRCS), the largest global study of HR practices, plays a pivotal role in the program. Led by Professor Dave Ulrich, the Ross School of Business, the RBL Group, and global research partners, the HRCS’ ongoing research spans more than 25 years and continues to shape the future of HR.

ACHIEVING GREATER RESPONSIBILITY

Before we left for AHREP, we were asked to lead our company’s strategic workforce planning. By the time we came back, we had a complete, research-based template for it. In just three months after returning to our jobs, we held educational sessions across the company to re-engineer our workforce planning. Now, every division uses the model we adapted at Michigan Ross. It’s been incredibly beneficial and well received.

BUILDING A LIFELONG NETWORK

We were so impressed by the high caliber of people in the program, and the global and industry representation was incredible. A year later, we still stay in touch—in fact, we’ve formed a LinkedIn group, and people regularly brainstorm about challenges and new solutions. I’ve already noticed that many people who were in the program have been promoted. AHREP helped us be successful, and it’s inspiring to see others benefit from it, too.

WHY EXCEPTIONAL TALENT ISN’T ENOUGH
Finding and retaining “A players” — or high-performing, high-potential employees — is key to success. But a single-minded focus on securing outstanding talent misses the point, says Professor Dick Beatty. Here, he explains why identifying “A positions” is also critical.

POSITIONS FIRST, PEOPLE SECOND
An exclusive focus on “A players” puts the horse before the cart. High performers only add value if they’re harnessed to the right cart — that is, engaged in work that is essential to company strategy. Few organizations identify their strategic “A positions” before focusing on which “A players” should fill them.

INGREDIENTS FOR “A POSITIONS”
Most HR professionals know the ingredients for an “A player.” But what constitutes an “A position”? Look for:

Strategic relevance: “A positions” should directly support the company’s key strategies. Organizational hierarchy is irrelevant. In fact, these positions may be relatively simple jobs that need to be performed creatively to further unique objectives that impact the creation of customer and economic value.

Performance variability: If employees in a particular role (e.g., regional sales) have varying degrees of performance, invest in their development. Better performance averages in key roles pay significant dividends in corporate value creation and the sustainability of the company.

THE BIG PICTURE: INTEGRATING MARKETING STRATEGY AND EXECUTION

This comprehensive program will help you develop and implement effective marketing strategies to realize your organization’s most important goals while delivering value to your customers. It integrates strategic planning with marketing execution using the Big Picture Framework, which takes a systems-thinking approach to align marketing and business strategy. You’ll develop actionable plans to create flexible, successful marketing strategies for your company, as well as effective strategies for segmentation, targeting, positioning, and pricing.

EFFECTIVE SALES LEADERSHIP

To win in today’s competitive global economy, sales leaders must effectively align their customers, teams, and strategies. This three-day program helps new and experienced sales leaders to explore and conquer the challenges of today’s sales management. It combines the art and science of leading the sales function with a strategic management perspective. The workshop is highly interactive and filled with current examples from some of the most successful sales forces around the world. Participants will gain a set of tools for managing sales teams in a dynamic environment.

STRATEGIC PLANNING AND IMPLEMENTATION

Learn to understand the strategies and business models to drive the future growth and success of your organization in today’s global economy. You’ll explore how to assess and prioritize opportunities, gauge global competition, and manage vertical relationships. You’ll emerge with new techniques to formulate, analyze, and implement winning, long-term strategies for growth and a road map for your organization’s success.

EFFECTIVE OFFICE SYSTEMS MANAGEMENT

In this program, you’ll learn how to design and implement effective practices to improve your operations, create agile services, and gain significant competitive advantage. Lively simulations of complex operational challenges will test your understanding of how to apply principles and extend your skills. You’ll walk away with the tools needed to continue to apply lean principles, reduce costs, and improve your service operation.

HIGH-EFFICIENCY OPERATIONS MANAGEMENT

Learn cutting-edge models and practical tools to implement lean practices, reduce costs, improve your service levels, and grow your bottom line. Content covers inventory management, logistics, capacity, cost management, and variability reduction for a manufacturing setting. Simulations of complex operations challenges will strengthen your mastery of concepts. We also will explore ways to partner with suppliers and customers to reduce global costs and increase service levels.
FAMILY BUSINESS
Explore the strategic, operational, financial, family, career, and business issues found in family-owned and -managed companies and privately held firms. Gain strategies and insights to successfully leverage resources by exploring topics such as strategic planning, governance and shareholder relations, family/work relationships, inter-generational issues, succession planning, non-family management, and selling and financing a family business. You’ll walk away with a detailed road map to address a specific business challenge and realize results.

LEADING LEADERS (ICLIF-ROSS PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM)
This joint offering by the ICLIF Leadership and Governance Centre and Michigan Ross is designed for busy enterprise executives by leaders themselves. It is based on our leading-edge research and provides practical and usable solutions that leaders can immediately apply at work. Leading Leaders is a journey through three levels: Energize Self, Enlist and Engerize Co-Leaders, and Energize the Organization. At the end of the program, participants routinely report a major breakthrough in their thinking as a leader and person.

BUSINESS LEADERSHIP (ICLIF-ROSS PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM)
When you move from leading one function to leading cross-functionally, your focus must shift from the tactical to the strategic. Success in this new role requires actively engaging across the enterprise and combining keen business acumen with finely tuned leadership ability. This program — a joint offering through the ICLIF Leadership and Governance Centre and Michigan Ross — explores state-of-the-art concepts and best practices. It enables participants to return to work with strategic tools and frameworks, the ability to adopt a bigger-picture perspective, and the skills to navigate the larger organization.

STRATEGIC RENEWAL AND CHANGE
Change initiatives are critically important, but to truly alter core corporate values, instill a sense of urgency in key employees, and gain buy-in among strategic parties, it takes a comprehensive plan across your organization. This program provides practical tools and concepts while helping you to understand competitive global factors that impact change initiatives. You’ll develop a vision for change, learn to make organizational diagnoses, and then design a plan that will enable you to lead change.

Nielsen

Kathie Miller. Nielsen’s SVP of communications and training, shares how a custom partnership with Ross is helping the company develop high-potential leaders and drive future business growth.

FINDING THE RIGHT FIT

Nielsen has well-established development programs to accelerate the growth of high-potential leaders, and recently made a significant investment to focus on an increasingly pivotal group — leaders with 10-15 years of experience.

“We’ve tried several different approaches, but engaging this particular group is a unique challenge,” says Miller. “Mid-career leaders at the top of their game are incredibly busy people. They’re already working more than 40 hours a week just to get their day jobs done, so asking them to participate in a program that requires a significant investment of time and energy is ambitious.”

Nielsen’s custom partnership with Ross began in 2012, and since then, they’ve seen this group of leaders make great progress. Initially, the company enrolled employees from its Global Business Services Unit (the operations and technology hub), but it has since opened the program to all business functions globally. Teams of 15 spend a week onsite at Ross, then work together virtually over the course of several months to complete a strategic project, which is supervised by Ross faculty.

INSTANT APPLICATION

Developing leadership capability is the primary reason Nielsen chose to pursue a custom partnership. However, Ross’ action-based learning approach enables the company to simultaneously tackle a range of business challenges, including industry-specific growth initiatives and cultural goals. Though the subject matter for each project differs, Miller says she receives consistent feedback on the impact of Ross’ positive leadership curriculum, which has been incorporated into Nielsen’s custom partnership.

“After our last session at Ross, we did a debrief at the end of the week. We went around the room and asked participants what they would do differently upon returning to work and, without exception, each person said they wanted to behave and manage in more positive ways. Nine months later, at the end of the project, they talked about living up to or continuing to work on the commitments they made in Ann Arbor. We’ve seen these principles make a true difference in our culture at Nielsen.”

EXTRAORDINARY TRANSFORMATIONS

“What really demonstrates the success of our custom partnership is the amount of progress we’ve seen,” says Miller. “When you’re dealing with leaders who are 10–15 years into their careers, it isn’t typical to see change in a nine-month period. But after emerging from the program, it’s obvious how much our associates have grown and developed. The results were almost immediately observable.”

She says it isn’t just faculty expertise that drives success. “What makes Ross faculty different is that they truly know how to engage a team, how to pace a project, and how to coach for results. I’m impressed by the way that Michigan’s process keeps our teams aligned, motivated, energized, and willing to do more on projects.”

MEASURABLE RESULTS

As a result of their custom partnership with Ross, Nielsen participants have:

• Received promotions and new positions with greater responsibility
• Dramatically strengthened cross-business communication
• Increased efficiency and productivity
• Delivered actionable innovation strategies
• Contributed to future business growth

To ensure successful outcomes, we collaborate with your organization before, during, and after program delivery.

DISCOVER
We identify your business issues, priorities, and objectives.

PHASE 2
DESIGN
We co-create an action-based suite of educational activities.

PHASE 3
DELIVER
We engage your talent in innovative learning experiences.

PHASE 4
DEPLOY
We help you implement solutions to achieve lasting results.

CONTINUOUS IMPROVEMENT
Together, we continually evaluate our ongoing collaboration with your executive team in light of emerging business challenges.

Transformative Solutions, Delivered Where You Are

Michigan Ross faculty are immersed in the way organizations around the world take on the most vexing challenges and pivotal opportunities. That’s why we come to you. Ross Executive Education programs are delivered where your business is, in the world’s most dynamic, fastest-growing economies.

Whether you’re in Asia or the U.S., South America, Africa, or Europe, Ross faculty deliver the latest business knowledge with the perspective for global leadership and the savvy for local application. Primary locations include:

ANN ARBOR // Conveniently located just 35 minutes from Detroit metro airport, Ann Arbor delivers the sophistication and opportunity of a big city with the charm of a college town. The University of Michigan is one of the top-ranked public universities in the world, and drives thinking in business, law, medicine, the life sciences, engineering, and more. Ross faculty integrate thinking from across the university to help businesses succeed.

HONG KONG // With a population of 7 million people, Hong Kong is one of the most dynamic cities in the world. Renowned for its awe-inspiring skyline and deep natural harbor, it is a hub of international finance and trade that drives Asia’s growing economy. It has one of the highest concentrations of corporate headquarters in the Asia-Pacific region, and in 2009 it was the largest center of IPOs in the world.

MUMBAI // In the coming decades, India stands to become one of the largest consumer markets in the world. As India’s largest city, Mumbai is home to many of the country’s largest multinational corporations and financial institutions. Engineering, health care, and information technology drive Mumbai’s dynamic and rapidly growing economy.

AND BEYOND // We design and deliver custom programs at organization sites throughout the world, and offer additional open-enrollment programs in Kuala Lumpur, Bangkok, and Khandala.

For Ross, global presence isn’t just an aspiration — it’s our identity.
The Ross Executive Residence facilities exceeded all of my expectations. The rooms were comfortable and equipped with all the necessities for business travel, and the classrooms and education facilities were wired for the latest technology. As for the dining experience, the food and service were second to none.
