The Automotive Executive Development Program (EDP) is a two-week program designed to equip present and future auto industry leaders with the knowledge and skills required for transforming the automotive industry in China, North America, and around the world. Competitive market forces and government policies are driving the auto industry to achieve a stronger position in the global economy through advanced manufacturing, innovative supply chain strategies, and technologies such as intelligent and autonomous driving.

Through close collaboration between the University of Michigan-Shanghai Jiao Tong University Joint Institute and the Stephen M. Ross School of Business at the University of Michigan, the EDP addresses the challenges and opportunities of this industry transformation. Kicking off with a 1-day forum at the Shanghai Auto Show, the first week features an in-depth look at the auto industry through company visits and interactions with expert faculty in Michigan, followed by a one week technology-focused immersion exploring cutting-edge trends in vehicle development in Palo Alto California. The program is delivered in English with Chinese simultaneous translation, making it accessible to automotive executives from around the world.

The program delves deeply into the disruptive changes that are dramatically reshaping the auto industry including: intelligent and autonomous vehicles; connected vehicles; clean energy and environmental issues; intelligent and advanced manufacturing; big data analytics and artificial intelligence; intelligent transportation networks, and a changing workforce. The program will also provide in-depth discussions of the strategies that will help participating companies strengthen their core competencies to achieve higher levels of global success.

Individual Benefits

• Gain deep insight into the technology, customer and talent trends that are re-shaping the future of the auto industry.
• Interact with leading experts from business, government, and academia.
• Grow a network of relationships with top executives from across the industry.
• Get to know the North American marketplace through an immersive experience and engagement with customers and key industry players.
• Discover how to lead a global enterprise.
• Gain strategies on how to compete in global export markets.
• Develop powerful strategies and skills for training the next generation of talent.
• Be equipped for more senior level executive roles with a global perspective.
• Develop strategic frameworks for leveraging technology for business growth and transformation.

Organizational Benefits
