MREACH

For high school students with minoritized identities

M | MICHIGAN ROSS

MREACH (Michigan Ross Enriching Academics in Collaboration with High Schools) provides academic preparation, career exploration, and hands-on business activities for students with minoritized identities in business school, including first-generation college-bound students and students from lower socioeconomic standing.

The program welcomes students with a demonstrated strong academic background and high academic potential. Students from diverse backgrounds who are interested in studying business in college are encouraged to apply, though students from all backgrounds are welcome.

MREACH brings high school students to Ross for a series of hands-on learning experiences. The program also offers insight into the college application and financial aid process. Sessions are typically held on one to two Saturdays per month from August to April at the University of Michigan's Ross School of Business in Ann Arbor or in Detroit when excursions are scheduled.

PROGRAM BENEFITS

- › Mentorship program with current University of Michigan BBA and MBA students.
- › Instruction/Presentations from Ross School of Business faculty, MBA Consortium members, and U-M students.
- › Exposure to Fortune 500 companies through office visits and career exploration programming.
- › Early access to resources and information that will help students with college applications, financial aid, scholarships, and standardized test prep.
- › Firsthand college experience through visits to the University of Michigan campus.
- › Personal and professional development opportunities including resume building, business etiquette, business communication, networking, and more.
- › SAT preparation with practice tests and study plans to help students do their best on exam day.

“High school students should be involved with MREACH because this program provides resources needed to make a wise college selection. Students are given many opportunities to ask questions which MREACH staff are always willing to answer.”

—Elkena Steele, MREACH Alum
